In modern society, change is happening fast. New technologies are creating new kinds of jobs and future workers will need various kinds of skills for these jobs. The future is bright, so let's learn many skills and get our dreams!

According to UNICEF, there are four kinds of skills that students can learn. First, foundational skills, which are learned in school, support the development of many other skills. There are two main foundational skills, literacy and numeracy. Literacy refers to the ability to read and write. Numeracy means to be able to understand numbers. For example, a student who is good at math might be said to have high numeracy skills. Next, digital skills are the skills needed to use and understand technology such as searching for and managing information, communicating through the Internet in a safe way, and so on. Job-specific skills, also known as technical and vocational skills, are skills that we can use for jobs like computer programming and accounting. Finally, there are transferable skills. Transferable skills are also called life skills, soft skills, or 21st century skills. Transferable skills are essential because they connect all of the other skills together or in other words, as UNICEF reports, act as “the glue of all skills.”

Transferable skills can be divided further into three categories: cognitive skills, social skills, and emotional skills. Cognitive skills have to do with thinking like the ability to solve problems, make decisions, or be creative. Social skills have to do with interaction with others such as communication and teamwork. Emotional skills focus on things like understanding a person's own emotions as well as others, dealing with stress, and being flexible.

Companies today have indicated that they are looking for people who can show they have transferable skills which are important for people's growth and success. Some of the soft skills that companies have reported as most important are communication, teamwork, problem-solving ability, planning and organization, leadership, time management, adaptability, creative thinking, self-management, productivity, initiative, and conflict resolution. In Japan, a business executive stated that the nation is moving from a system of lifetime employment to a skills-based employment system. This means that young people are working less time at one company than before. Therefore, developing transferable skills in addition to the other skills will make workers more attractive to companies. In this way, workers will find greater success in their careers.

One serious problem that the world currently faces is rising sea levels. Scientists agree that rising sea levels are linked to global warming. The Earth is now getting warmer because of human activities. People rely heavily on fossil fuels such as oil, gas, and coal as energy sources for their homes, transportation, and businesses. Using fossil fuels releases carbon dioxide (CO₂) into the atmosphere, or the air surrounding the Earth and , the Earth's temperature rises even more. Experts report that the climate is warming at a much faster rate than before. Rising sea levels are one of the biggest problems caused by global warming, and there are two main causes.

One main cause of rising sea levels is the melting of glaciers and ice sheets, which are large masses of ice that cover land. With global warming and increasing temperatures, this ice melts and flows into the ocean, making the . There has been a rapid decrease in the amount of ice in the Arctic. As temperatures rise around the world, more and more of the ice is lost. Even worse, melting ice itself adds to global warming. Why? Ice is white, so it reflects the sun's heat, while the surface of the ocean is dark, so it absorbs the sun's heat. , as ice melts, it becomes water, which absorbs heat, making the ocean warmer. This speeds the melting of the ice and the rising of the sea level.

The second cause of rising sea levels is that water expands as it gets warmer. As the temperature of the ocean rises, the ocean expands, even without any additional water from the melting ice. This causes sea levels to rise. Therefore, areas in coastal and low-lying areas may experience flooding. Island communities which lie low such as Tuvalu in the Pacific Ocean could disappear. Sadly, many islands, such as Kale and Rapita in the Solomon Islands, have already disappeared into the ocean. These islands were once home to many people. If the sea level rises by one meter, about 300 million people all over the world would have to leave their homes. Sea level rise is a big problem for the millions of people who live

Rising sea levels have changed the lives of many people, such as those living in the Pacific Island Countries. Scientists report that the situation is only going
